

Apology Accepted: Challenge Failed For Girl Who Danced In The Middle Of EDSA

Anything that the netizens set as trends on the internet will ever go viral, affecting every social media user's right minds.

Over the past couple of weeks, a new trend set the world on fire; not because of its positive effect, but because of its senseless yet tempting charm. If you have never heard about Drake's song "In My Feelings," then you must be living under the cave all this time.

The "In My Feelings Challenge" started just a couple of days after Drake released his song. The song itself is very catchy, not to mention his dance moves, which are all famous.

A celebrity first posted a video of himself on Instagram then the rest is history. Is it Drake's fault?

Since then, the "challenge" has been taken by many others who were inspired by Drake's cool moves and took it to social media to gain likes. The Philippines, being the social media capital, is not exempted.

Days ago, a young woman became the talk of the town when she challenged herself to do the "In My Feelings Challenge" along the busy road of EDSA. As we all know, EDSA is a pretty much busy place already. She and her friends thought it would be fun to do and probably get her some likes and encouraging comments, but no, the MMDA haunted her down right after the video went public.

“Gusto ko lang po humingi ng paumanhin sa mga naabalang motorista noong ako po ay bumaba ng sasakyan ng aking kaibigan para sa “In My Feelings Challenge”. Ako po at ang aking mga kaibigan ay handang bayaran ang mga violation na dapat po naming bayaran.”

The challenge is a trend made by passengers in the front seat of a car, step out of the moving vehicle with the door open, and sing and dance to the song on the road. The driver then slowly drives away while recording the challenge taker.

MMDA Spokesperson Assistant Secretary Celine Pialago accepted the apology but still requests the woman and her friend to pay the fines.
